San Ramon's Vientos Bajos will be the venue for the opening performance of the Costa Rica tour of Fault Lines, presented by the Little Theatre Group of Costa Rica (LTG), Latin American's longest-running English-language theatre company. Throughout February the company will perform staged readings of this dramatic comedy by award-winning U.S. playwright George Sapio, directed by Maura Stephens, in several venues around the country. The tour kicks off in San Ramon on Saturday, 2 February, 2019, at 2:00 p.m. after the "Taste of Spain" tapas luncheon.

"I'm thrilled to partner with the LTG in its 70th year," says Sapio, now based in Puriscal, "and I hope to work with them on many future productions." Annette Hallett, President of LTG, adds, "We're very excited to be performing in San Ramon, where we have so many friends and supporters." George Sapio's works, including national award-winning Ghosts and Oatmeal and a Cigarette, have been produced around the United States, but this is the first time his work has been seen in Central America.

Fault Lines has recently had two productions in New York State. Fault Lines revolves around three sisters, their long-dead parents—whose presence is still felt—and one's husband. All four characters hold secrets. Eldest sister Teresa, played by Hallett, is a no-nonsense nun to whom her sisters refer as "Mother Superior." Middle sister Ginger, played by Sophie Segers, is married to Shawn. They've been having some financial troubles since both lost their jobs; she's trying to find clients for a therapy business while Shawn (Milo Bohack) practices cooking in hopes of getting a job as a chef. Meanwhile, they've been living with high-strung youngest sister Stazi, a forensic pathologist, played by Anthar Darwish. There is some adult language, and the show is recommended for ages 13 and up, at parental discretion.
